 WASHINGTON (AP) -- Among the human remains painstakingly sorted from the Pentagon and Pennsylvania crash sites of September 11 are those of nine of the hijackers. The FBI has held them for months, and no one seems to know what should be done with them. It's a politically and emotionally charged question for the government, which eventually must decide how to dispose of some of the most despised men in American history. "I think in Islam, you're supposed to be buried whole, so I would take them and scatter them all over the place," said Donn Marshall, whose wife, Shelley, died at the Pentagon. "They don't deserve any kind of religious courtesies." In New York, where the monumental task of identifying the remains of 2,823 victims believed to be dead continues, it has been linked to the 10 hijackers who crashed two airliners into the World Trade Center. About half of the site was incinerated. In contrast, the remains of all 40 victims in the Pennsylvania crash and the 184 victims at the Pentagon site were identified months ago. Little attention has been paid to remains found mingled with those of the victims. "It's a unique situation," said Dr. Jerry Spencer, medical examiner for the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, who worked 30 years as a Navy forensic pathologist. "The terrorists are usually not in our possession in the United States like this. The other families want them back?" Four sets of remains in Pennsylvania and five at the Pentagon were recovered together as the hijackers -- but not identified by name -- through a process of elimination. Family members of passengers and crews and those who died within the Pentagon provided DNA samples of toothbrushes or hairbrushes, to aid with identification. The remains that didn't match any of those recovered were ruled to be the terrorists, said Chris Kelly, spokesman for the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology. The nine sets of remains matched the number of hijackers believed to be on the two reference samples from the hijackers' personal effects or from their immediate families to compare. With the recovered DNA, the remains could not be matched to an individual. With the one-year anniversary of the September 11 attacks, State Department officials said Friday they had received no requests for the remains. The department is responsible for handling such a request from any government seeking the return of a citizen's body. Officials said that all but one of the nine hijackers recovered had connections to Saudi Arabia. The other eight were from other countries. Officials at the Saudi Embassy in Washington did not respond to requests for comment. In more than 100 countries, foreign families also could contact local authorities. But the hijackers' remains are under the control of the FBI. "To the best of my knowledge, there haven't been any friends or family members to try to claim these people," said Jeff Killeen, spokesman for the FBI field office in Pittsburgh. "They are in the FBI in Washington. They have not been released." In cases where badly damaged bodies cannot when no one steps forward to claim a body, state or local laws usually dictate what will be done a mass disaster, and they can't identify the remains, they may put all of them in a mass grave or cremated," said Michael Bell, vice president of the National Association of Medical Examiners and examiner for Broward County, Fla. Authorities usually retain only small DNA samples, photograph pertinent information that might lead to identification later or become evidence in a criminal case memorial service is planned for Arlington National Cemetery on Sept. 12, when all the remains fr that could not be matched with a particular victim will be buried, said Maj. Sandy Troeber, a spot remains linked to terrorists were taken by the FBI in February, she said. James Starrs, a profess science and law at George Washington University, said there should be public oversight of what t does with human remains, whether they are criminals or victims. Policies must take into account cases where relatives don't seek repatriation of remains, including many examples of Americans battlefields, noted Starrs, who is known for his forensic work in historical cases, such as the outli and the mystery of the Boston Strangler. "Good persons or bad persons, you can't assume that t going to come to the fore and try to reclaim their remains," Starr said.

Men are only men, Little Brother, and their talk is like the talk of frogs in a pond.

I'll say what most of us thought in the last thread about this. Wrap their remains in pig shit and : Land. And broadcast it on CNN so the entire Arab world will see. In case some of you don't know head who dies in a self described Jihad and his body touches the remains or any portion of a pig not receive their 72 virgins or enter paradise.

Mix thoroughly with bacon grease then discard.

Trusting your life to the benevolence of an armed criminal is not a strategy, it is stupid!
