investigating agencies. The "crime-scene and forensic experts" of FBI are carrying equipment capable of detecting the type and origin of ammunition and grenades used by the terrorists, suspected to be from Pakistan.

The FBI sleuths, which registered a case in connection with the audacious Mumbai serial attack yesterday, are assisting Indian agencies in cracking Internet telephony codes used by terrorists of Lashker-e-Taiba.

The militants received calls via Voice Over Internet Protocol (VOIP) from Pakistan and the FBI, along with the Indian Intelligence agencies, is trying to break the code to see when the calls started coming in on the phone besides ascertaining the instruments` previous locations.

As per US laws, the FBI has to probe the death of any American citizen outside of the US and later submit a chargesheet.

The FBI is also trying to ascertain the origin of the e-mail that was sent claiming responsibility for the attacks and how many times it was opened in Pakistan.

The deciphered packets of the satellite conversation between the militants and their handlers, and the air length frequency waves used for conversing on Internet are also being examined.

This is probably the second time after the infamous IC-814 hijacking that the FBI has registered a case in India. A US citizen - Jeanne Moore - was in the Indian Airlines aircraft that was hijacked.

According to reports, the FBI team is also trying to ascertain the involvement of global terror group al Qaeda or its various franchisees in the Mumbai terror attacks.

Intelligence officials believe that Mumbai attacks could be part of a larger conspiracy to gain favourable political outcomes for extremists.

Indian intelligence officials are convinced that the attack on Mumbai bears the hallmark of Lashkar-e-Taiba, which was believed to be behind the 2001 attack on the Indian Parliament.

The security agencies are also trying to obtain clues about the five missing terrorist who are believed to have escaped after the carnage amid concerns that they could strike again.
